CULTURAL TRIPS

The archeological zone of Teotihuacan...
Was designated as a UNESCO World Heritage Site in 1987, it is one of the most important and most visited archaeological sites in Mexico.

Teotihuacan's culture and history are still largely mysterious. The civilizations left massive ruins, but no trace has yet been found of a writing system, and very little is known about its inhabitants, who were succeeded first by the Toltecs and later by the Aztecs.

Guanajuato is a colonial gem sitting in a valley...
Around 220 miles northwest of Mexico City.
The great architecture of this gorgeous city was built with the enormous wealth generated from the silver mines that enjoyed their heyday during the 17th and 18th centuries. At this time, Guanajuato was the source for one third of the world's silver supply.
Today, you can see Guanajuato in its unspoiled, perfectly preserved splendor. It's like stepping back in time. The city is incredibly picturesque.
